GETTING HIS GOAT—Policeman Frank Solis tries to lure goat from top of station wagon hood where it had taken a solid stand to prevent owner, Mrs. Vivian Max, from using it to summon goat catcher. She finally called police.

This Billy Finally Got the Lady's Goat

There was only one problem Mrs. Walter Max encountered when she embarked on a shopping trip Monday morning.

A goat was perched on the hood of her station wagon.

She first noticed the billy when it chased her sons, Paul, 5, and Jimmy, 2, through their backyard at 2414 W. 232nd St.

Mrs. Max decided to leave it there and bundled the children into the car to set off in search of the goat's owner.

The goat jumped right on the hood. This was too much for Mrs. Max, who thought the time had come to call police and get out of the car. The goat jumped off also and started chewing newly planted begonias.

When the housewife tried to chase the animal out of the flower bed, the goat chased her and she barely made it inside the house.

Officer Frank Solis, who arrived on the scene, finally cornered the billy on top of a scaffold in the backyard. He tied it to a post until Bob Corrao, South Bay Humane Society officer, put the goat in his paddy-wagon.

The animal expert surveyed the scene. "I know goats are supposed to eat tin cans, but I never knew they went after whole station wagons," he mused.
